

Eyes of the Beloved

by wahiduddin July 21, 2004

-- from <http://wahiduddin.net> --

(capo 3)

Am G
Have you ever been so happy
Am
that you could just sit for hours
Em
staring into the eyes
Am
of your Beloved?

Am G
Have you ever been so deep in love
Am
that you needed nothing else
Em
just gazing upon the beauty
Am
of your Beloved?

Am G
Have you ever been so happy
Am
that you could just stroll for hours Em
walking along
Am
with your Beloved?

Dm Am
Eyes wide open Dm Am
Heart wide open

Em
Everywhere you look, everything you touch
Am
is that Beloved

Em
Everywhere you look, everything you touch
Am
is that Beloved

Here are a few quotes that touch on this same theme:

First I thought my life's work was psychology. And then I thought my life's work was psychedelics. Then I thought my life's work was bringing eastern philosophy to the West. Now... whatever I'm doing is my life's work, even if it's sitting by the window.

Ram Dass (Richard Alpert)

As one in the arms of their beloved is not aware of what is within and what is without, so a person in union with the Self is not concerned with what is within and what is without, for in such Unity all desires find their perfect fulfillment. With no desires to be fulfilled, one goes beyond desire and sorrow.

Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 4.3.21

If you are seeking closeness to the Beloved, love everyone. Whether in their presence or absence, see only their good. If you want to be as clear and refreshing as the breath of the morning breeze, like the sun have nothing but warmth and light for everyone.

Shaikh Abu-Saeed Abil-Khair

The best form to worship God is every form.

Neem Karoli

There is only one virtue and one sin
for a soul on the path:
virtue when he is conscious of God and sin when he is not.

Abu Hashim Madani